REMARKS.

In 1833, it was resolved, that a Select Committee be appointed at the commencement of each Session, "to which shall be referred all Petitions presented to The House, with the exception of such as complain of undue Returns or relate to Private Bills; and that such Committee do classify and prepare abstracts of the same, in such form and manner as shall appear to them best suited to convey to The House all requisite information respecting their contents, and do report the same from time to time to The House; and that such Reports do in all cases set forth the number of Signatures to each petition, and that such Committee have power to direct the printing, in extenso, of such Petitions, or of such parts of Petitions as shall appear to require it; and that such Committee have power to report their opinion and observations thereupon to The House."

Accordingly, in each subsequent year a similar Committee has been appointed, who have carefully supervised the signatures to such Petitions, and made a selection for printing, attentively comparing them, to avoid publishing copies of the same Petition, as was constantly the case under the old system; and since their appointment they have classified and abstracted, in 23 years, 283,075 Petitions, to which 70,613,245 signatures were attached, and have selected 29,230 for printing, either in extenso or in part, having made in that period, 1,183 reports.

It will be seen that previous to 1832, nearly one-half of the whole number of Petitions presented were ordered to be printed, upon motion; if this practice had continued, the sums paid for printing, owing to the late great increase in the number of Petitions, would have enormously increased. This Committee has therefore effected annually a great saving of expense, and also of the time of The House.

A general classification and short statement of the objects of Petitions is still made nightly in the Votes, and published on the morning following.

The Committee now place a distinguishing mark in their Reports against such Petitions as are signed officially or under seal, considering them of greater importance than others, to which perhaps only a few signatures are appended. In 1854–5, out of 10,036 Petitions presented, 1,714 were from corporations, public meetings, and other bodies of persons, and signed officially or under seal.

*The increase of expense is caused by the more frequent Reports of the Committee, who, to meet the wishes of Members, and for the sake of a prompt publication of Petitions, have met since 1847–8 three times instead of twice in each week, saving thereby, on the other hand, a considerable expense, by doing away with the necessity for printing Petitions in the Supplement to the Votes. An Index to the Appendix is also now published.

POLLING PAPERS.

RETURN to an Order of the Honourable The House of Commons, dated 1 May 1855;—for,

COPY "of a MEMORANDUM on the subject of POLLING PAPERS addressed by Viscount Ebrington to the Poor-Law Board."

Poor-Law Board, Whitehall, 7 May 1855.

COURTENAY, Secretary.

LETTER from Lord Ebrington to the President of the Poor Law Board.

Sir, Grosvenor-square, 13 March 1855.

IN compliance with the promise I made you the other day, when I had the pleasure of conversing with you upon the subject of voting by voting papers collected at the voters' own residences, I have the honour to enclose you a Memorandum which I have just drawn up with regard to the advantages of that system, and the practical means of obviating some of the evils inherent in its operation as conducted at present under the regulations of the Poor Law Board.

I have, &c.

MEMORANDUM on VOTING by VOTING PAPERS collected at the VOTERS' RESIDENCES.

I HAVE explained very shortly, in pages 34 and 35 of my pamphlet,* the general principles on which I prefer the system of collecting the votes of electors at their houses, instead of collecting the electors to give their votes at a polling place. In pages 25, 26 and 27 of the first annual Report of the Poor Law Commissioners, are to be found on behalf of this system (even as at present imperfectly carried out under the Poor Law Board and the Board of Health) some other reasons which, mutatis mutandis, apply to a town as well as to a county population, though the distances saved to the voters in the one case may be miles, and in the other furlongs only. Getting 1,000 votes recorded, as proposed in the New Health Bill, not only sacrifices, in the aggregate, much more valuable time and trouble in the shape of a larger or smaller portion of 1,000 unpaid persons' day's work, by sending the unpaid many to the paid few, the electors to the poll clerks; instead of sending the few round to the many, the paid collectors to the unpaid voters' residences; but it also causes a much greater aggregate of distance to be travelled; for on the one system the paid vote collector has only to go round from one elector's house to another till he has exhausted his list; on the other, the 1,000 unpaid electors have each individually to go up from their 1,000 residences to the poll. The difference between the aggregate cost of labour and time (that is, of money's worth) under these two systems admits of no dispute. But it may be said that the voters are unpaid, and that therefore the cost is theirs if they vote, and not either the public's or the candidates'; whereas the vote collectors must be paid either by the candidate or the public. But even were the fact so, this argument could hardly hold good, for it has always been considered a wise economy for the community to appoint and and pay a few persons specially to do what the many, though able indeed to do separately for themselves, must do separately at a disadvantage. Government provides, and has long provided, postmen to go round with our letters; and municipalities provide dustmen to go round for the dust and refuse of our houses. Indeed, advancing civilisation has multiplied, and is constantly multiplying, the number of services thus rendered, by specially appointed and duly paid persons, to the community, more conveniently and cheaply than its members used to perform them separately for themselves. We might, therefore, well ask why should we not only not advance, but actually retrograde in our voting arrangements? Why should we revert to a clumsy and extravagant system in these elections, after having given it up for an improved one?

But is it true that the expense of the conveyance of voters to the poll does not fall, in the shape of positive money payments, upon candidates or their committees? Having fought in three different boroughs no less than five contested Parliamentary elections I know too well, to my cost, how serious an item flys, omnibuses and cabs have formed on each occasion. And at my last election, of my most unexpectedly heavy bill of 4,937 l., conveyances for voters figure for no less a charge than 365 l. A friend told me, the other day, that in his county he should reckon this item of conveyance at full 2,000 l. And I am informed that in municipal and parochial elections this item bears quite an equal proportion to the happily somewhat smaller aggregate expense.

But after all, does this vast expenditure suffice to get the votes of the bulk of the electors recorded? In my late election, it was said that a larger number of votes had been polled for me than ever had been before for any candidate at a metropolitan election. And yet, what proportion did the total votes polled bear to the number on the register? A little more than half; nothing like three-fourths. Is this case exceptional? By no means. The "Edinburgh Review" gives a list of a dozen large constituencies, with an aggregate of 131,169 on the register, of which, at the contested elections, not more than 72,187, or 55 per cent., voted at the last dissolution. I have myself traced exactly the same state of things at the several contested elections, since the Reform Bill, in many of the large constituencies; but further figures are needless to prove what is notorious. Is this confined to Parliamentary elections? In the City elections, where a larger proportion vote than usually in other towns, the votes at the contest, 1853, for the chamberlainship, were, Key 2,729, Scott 2,658 only, out of a Livery numbering some 13,000; and the expenses are stated, by Sir John Key and Mr. Scott, to have been some 8,000 l. between them, of which many hundreds were spent on conveyance. As a specimen of the contested elections in its parishes, I may mention that, out of some 16,000 ratepayers (all voters, with single votes, under Hobhouse's Act) in Marylebone, at no one of the elections, for the last three years, have as many as 5,500 voted, though some of them have been fiercely contested, and many conveyances provided for voters. At St. Pancras, with about 20,000 under the same Act, not more than 2,718 voted in 1853, though great excitement is said to have prevailed; and long processions of cabs, with banners flying and colours displayed, are described to have been seen on the occasion.

But at St. Pancras we have some instructive returns about an election, conducted on the vote-collecting system, in 1837, when the number of ratepayers was about 13,000, to whom must be added those entitled to vote as owners, under the New Poor Law. The number of persons that recorded their votes on that occasion was 7,649. Now this point is a very important one. We have heard, from both sides of the House, a recognition of the impropriety of refusing the franchise to many well entitled to enjoy it, and well capable of using it; and various schemes have been propounded for its extension; but hitherto, whether wisely or not, these always have been for practically lowering the franchise. Lord John Russell proposed the admission of 5 l. renters in the boroughs; Mr. Locke King that of the 10 l. renters in the counties; Mr. Walpole suggested the militiamen. The refusal of the franchise, and a prohibitory duty, in the shape of time and trouble (i. e. money's worth), imposed upon its exercise, come practically to much the same thing. The grievance is certainly more crying in the one case; but is it practically much, if at all, more injurious? You know whom you exclude by the refusal of the franchise: you know know not whom you will exclude by your discouraging and prohibitory duty upon its exercise. Let us, however, consider a little who have been hitherto practically disfranchised by our clumsy system of voting. Ask any election agent. He will tell you of whole streets in the metropolis full of educated, respectable, and wealthy inhabitants, who have scarcely ever contributed one vote to the decision of any parochial contest, and contribute very few indeed even to that of a Parliamentary contest.

At my election, costing the extravagant sum of 5,000*l.*, of which the conveyance of voters amounted to some 400*l.*, I am informed that though, owing to special circumstances, an immense number of voters, many years on the register, recorded their votes for the first time, yet three-fourths of the electors in some of the wealthiest streets and squares in Paddington never polled at all. But how was it in the crowded lanes and alleys where the votes are numerous? For every house in this highly rented town comes up to the 10*l.* mark, and might send forth a voter but for the operation of the ratepaying clauses, of removals within the year, &c. &c. Of the electors registered in Cromer-street, I hear that some three-fourths, or about the reverse proportion, voted; and yet if one or the other (which I deprecate) is to be withheld, whose voice in the choice of a representative can the interests of the country best spare? I have mentioned in my pamphlet (page 37) the reasons which specially indispose electors in large constituencies to refrain from giving a vote which individually can be but of so little importance; and I have also described the sort of characters in all ranks who principally refrain from the exercise of the privilege, or, to speak more properly, from the performance of the positive duty, of voting. Under the system of voting papers, we know from experience that the non-exercise of the franchise, though still far too common, except in times of great excitement, is not only infinitely rarer, but also prevails to the greatest degree in the classes who under the other system contribute the largest proportion of votes, who love the idleness, noise, and bustle of a poll, but can take comparatively little interest in so flat a proceeding as an election without either the shouting, or the music, or the colours, or the gratuitous drives in omnibuses and cabs, to which they have been accustomed.

The arguments against arrangements involving a diminution of trouble to the voter and expense to the candidate, on the ground that they at the same time involved a diminution of the excitement and public interest taken in elections, were so fully met in the debates during the passing of the Reform Bill, upon the proposal for establishing a number of polling places in counties and boroughs, instead of bringing up (as before) every county voter to the county town and burgess to the town-hall, and that first move in affirmation of the principle I here contend for was affirmed by such overwhelming majorities, that I need not dwell further upon it.

Such being the state of the case, the question of the comparative desirableness of the two systems seems scarcely arguable, provided the newer one can be shown to afford, along with its other incontestable advantages, adequate securities against fraud. But even if this were impracticable, which I am prepared to show it is not, I should unhesitatingly prefer, as a declaration of the deliberate choice of any constituency, the present very defectively managed election by voting papers, to the yet clumsier and more defective election at a poll.

But is there any such necessity?

The cases of alleged fraud at elections of guardians brought before me while I was Secretary to the Poor Law Board, chiefly resolved themselves into one of these two classes:—

The withholding, wilful destruction, or alteration of the voting papers by the returning officer, or at his instigation by the vote collectors employed by him; or else the perpetration of these acts contrary to the wishes of the returning officer by the vote collectors, either of their own accord or at the instigation of others.

The number of cases of the first class even alleged was, as might be expected, very small; the number established, or, indeed, not conclusively disproved, very small indeed. The number of the second class was more numerous; but under what circumstances? The whole sum allowed to the returning officer for the expenses of an election is only one halfpenny per head in cases where there is a contest in a parish with less than 500 inhabitants, and only one farthing in a parish where there are more; and the remuneration he is able to afford out of this to the distributor and collector of votes is, I believe, some 2*s.* or 3*s.* only per diem. At one time the police were employed at a very moderate sum to discharge this function in the metropolitan district, and I am told did it most satisfactorily. It was, however, afterwards discovered that under the Act they were not allowed to receive payment for any services from any other parties than the Commissioners of Police, and the public was consequently deprived in this instance, as in the analogous case of the relieving officership for vagrants, of the benefit of their performance of a duty which they could discharge cheaper and more satisfactorily than any other persons. It may easily be conceived that a man specially employed on this rarely recurring job, at such a remuneration as I have described, would not invariably be inaccessible to some of the temptations in the shape of drink or money, which eager partisans might throw in his way. No precautions are ever taken to facilitate the safe custody of the voting papers; they are left open at the voters' houses; they are collected afterwards in the collector's pockets. He is unprovided with any locked bag or box for their reception and safe custody. He goes his rounds unaccompanied by any authorised representative of the contending parties to see that nothing improper takes place; and because, when a new and sound system is put into operation in such a rude and careless manner, it does not work quite perfectly, and because advantage is taken of some of the obvious facilities such carelessness offers to fraud, the Government is, therefore, to be persuaded to give the plan up altogether, without taking any evidence as to its practical working, even in its present defective state, much less considering whether these defects could not be easily removed.

In the first place, while the police were employed as vote collectors, I am not aware of any complaint being made with regard to the proper and impartial collection or safe custody of the voting papers. That being the case, the first obvious suggestion would be employing as collectors either the police, or else fitting persons adequately remunerated for their trouble and responsibility; the next would be permitting the candidates each to send round with every vote collector a trustworthy representative or agent to see fair play, and prevent the voter or his paper from being tampered with while the collection proceeded.

As cases have occurred of papers being wilfully destroyed or carelessly lost by the collector in the course of his rounds, a common postman's bag or box, with a slit at the top, might be provided for him, into which the voting papers might be dropped, safe from inspection, alteration, or loss, until the unlocking of the box by the returning officer when delivered into his hands by the vote collector. If the agents of the several candidates were present during this operation, and assisted to seal up the papers so delivered; and if the process of counting the papers up when they had all been collected, were besides afterwards performed by the returning officer in the presence of the candidates, or their authorised representatives, it would seem very difficult for the vote collector or returning officer to deal unfairly with them.

But this does not quite get over the difficulty of a voting paper being tampered with, owing to canvassing parties coming in and bothering the voter's family, or gaining over his servants after the voter, having signed his paper, has left his home for his daily occupation. A very simple remedy would, in my opinion, prevent this in every case, except one of very skilful and deliberate fraud: instead of being left open at the voter's house, I would have every voting paper put into an open envelope, addressed to the returning officer, and capable of being fastened in the usual way; and I would have this left in a properly closed envelope, with the voter's name upon it, at his residence; and I would, besides, make it a punishable offence for any one, except the proper party, to open either the original envelope, or the envelope enclosed when it had been once fastened by the voter.

If this were done, I do not say that I expect all fraudulent or improper proceedings at elections to be suddenly rendered impossible, but I believe that the proportion of cases of tampering with voting papers would not exceed those of personation, &c. at polls; both being quite rare and exceptional; both easily preventible by tolerable care, and punishable if discovered. In the case of Parliamentary liamentary contests, where saving of expense is of less relative importance than in either parochial or municipal elections, I might add, that on this system, by binding over the returning officer to secrecy for a while, and obliging him to publish, at the end of six weeks or two months, a correct list of the poll, to be verified by the voting papers, in the presence of duly authorised representatives of the candidates, many of the advantages of the ballot would be obtained, without its disadvantages. Most of the cases of persecution we hear of, in the case of tenants or tradesmen, originate, I believe, in the irritation caused by the knowledge of their votes reaching the landlord or customer while under the full excitement of the election, and in his determination about his conduct towards them being taken and announced while under the influence of those feelings. The same information reaching him a month later would, I believe, in most cases produce a very different effect upon him. But I am wandering from the subject I promised to treat of in this Memorandum; so I will only add, that I believe this would be well worth trying, as a substitute for the ballot.

GENERAL INDEX

TO THE

DIVISIONS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

1836—1852.

Ordered, by The House of Commons, to be Printed,
14 August 1855.

Rules, Orders and Forms of Proceedings of the House of Commons relative to Divisions.

No Member is entitled to vote in any Division unless he was present in the House when the Question was put; and the Vote of any Member who was not so present will be disallowed.

Every Member present in the House when the Question is put, will be required to vote.

When Strangers have withdrawn, in obedience to Mr. Speaker's directions, the doors are locked, and no Member can either enter or leave the House until after the Division.

By Standing Orders, 19th July 1854, except when Mr. Speaker, or the Chairman of a Committee of the whole House, shall otherwise direct, his order for the withdrawal of Strangers during a Division is understood to apply to Strangers occupying Seats below the Bar, and in the Front Gallery, and will be enforced by the Serjeant-at-Arms accordingly.

So soon as the voices have been taken, the Clerk is to turn a two-minute sand-glass, kept on the Table for that purpose, and the doors are not to be closed until after the lapse of two minutes, as indicated by such sand-glass.

The doors are to be closed so soon after the lapse of two minutes as the Speaker, or the Chairman of a Committee of the whole House, shall think proper to direct. When the doors have been locked, and all the Members are in their places, Mr. Speaker puts the Question; and after the voices have been given, declares whether, in his opinion, the "Ayes" or the "Noes" "have it," which not being agreed to, he directs the "Ayes" to go into the right Lobby, and the "Noes" into the left Lobby, and appoints two Tellers for each party.

In case there should not be two Tellers for one of the parties, Mr. Speaker forthwith declares the Resolution of the House.

In returning from either Lobby, every Member is counted by the Tellers, and his name is also taken down by the Division Clerks.*

When all the Members have resumed their places, the Tellers on either side come to the Table and report the numbers to Mr. Speaker, who declares them to the House.

In case of confusion or error concerning the numbers reported, unless the same can be otherwise corrected, the House will proceed to a Second Division.

If the numbers have been inaccurately reported, the House, on being afterwards informed thereof, will order the Journal to be corrected.

In case of an equality of Votes, Mr. Speaker gives a casting voice, and any reasons stated by him are entered in the Journal.

The Names of Members who have voted on Divisions are printed in alphabetical order, and delivered daily to Members with the Votes and Proceedings.

Divisions are taken in a Committee of the whole House, in the same manner as in the House itself.

No Member is entitled to vote upon any Question in which he has a direct pecuniary interest, and the Vote of any Member so interested will be disallowed.

The Rule of this House, relating to the Vote, upon any Question in the House of a Member having an interest in the matter upon which the Vote is given, applies likewise to any Vote of a Member so interested in a Committee.

* The particular attention of Members is requested to the following Notice, which has been printed and circulated with the Votes:—

"To ensure accuracy and facility in taking Divisions, it is requested that every Member, whether personally known to the Division Clerks or not, will give his Name, distinctly and audibly, as he passes the Division Desk."

Comptroller of the Exchequer:

Motion, That it appears, by a copy of a warrant on the table of this House, that a pension of 1,000*l.* a year has been granted by Her Majesty to the late Comptroller of the Exchequer, on retirement from that office, on the ground of "zealous and efficient services rendered to the public during a period of nearly half a century, in which interval of time he filled the offices of Chancellor of the Exchequer for Ireland, and Comptroller-general of the Exchequer for the United Kingdom;" that it appears that the said Comptroller-general filled the office of Chancellor of the Exchequer for Ireland during the period of 13 months only, viz., from the month of February 1806 to the month of April 1807, &c.; that, considering all these circumstances, and more especially the great importance of keeping the Comptroller-general of the Exchequer independent of the influence of the Crown, as also of ensuring a strict adherence to the spirit of the resolution of this House on the subject of Civil List pensions, this House deems it expedient to express its decided opinion that the grant of 1,000*l.* a year to Sir John Newport, under the warrant before mentioned, ought not to be drawn into a precedent (Mr. Liddell):—Amendment proposed, to leave out from the first word "that," in the last paragraph, to the end of the question, in order to add the words, "it appears to this House that the Right honourable Sir John Newport, in his official capacity of Chancellor of the Exchequer in Ireland, exerted himself to the utmost to restrain useless expenses, to promote education, and to improve trade and intercourse between Ireland and the other parts of the United Kingdom; that while in the said office he directed, and after leaving office suggested, various inquiries, which led to the adoption by Parliament of measures, highly conducive to the better administration of the law, and beneficial to the revenue; that after serving for five years in the honourable office of Comptroller of Exchequer, being then upwards of 80 years of age, and afflicted with bodily infirmity, he withdrew from public life, respected for the unblemished integrity of his character, to pass in retirement the remainder of his days; that considering that Sir John Newport was not in affluent circumstances when he thus withdrew from office, this House is satisfied that the grant of a pension to a retired Comptroller of the Exchequer, in circumstances so peculiar, cannot be drawn into a precedent in favour of persons who have not "just claims on the Royal beneficence," and are not distinguished by the "performance of duties to the public," instead thereof (Lord Viscount Morpeth).—Question put, That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question.——AYES 240—NOES 212 - - - - - - - - February 27, 1840, p. 99.

[Session 1841.]

Motion, That Her Majesty's Ministers do not sufficiently possess the confidence of the House of Commons to enable them to carry through the House measures which they deem of essential importance to the public welfare, and that their continuance in office, under such circumstances, is at variance with the spirit of the constitution (Sir Robert Peel).——AYES 312—NOES 311 - - - - - - - - - - - - - - — June 4, 1841, p. 159.

[Session 1850.]

Government of Ireland:

[Session 1839.]

Motion, That it is the opinion of this House that it is expedient to persevere in those principles which have guided the Executive Government of Ireland of late years, and which have tended to the effectual administration of the law, and the general improvement of that part of the United Kingdom (Lord John Russell):—Amendment proposed, to leave out from the word "That" to the end of the question, in order to add the words, "on the 13th of March last a motion was made in this House for the production of various documents connected with the state of Ireland in respect to crime and outrage: That, on the 21st of March last, the House of Lords appointed a Select Committee 'to inquire into the state of Ireland since the year 1835, in respect to crime and outrage, which have rendered life and property insecure in that part of the empire': That it appears to this House, that the appointment of a Committee of Inquiry by the House of Lords does not justify Her Majesty's Ministers in calling upon this House to make a declaration of opinion with respect to one branch of the public policy of the Executive Government, still less a declaration of opinion which is neither explicit as to the principles which it professes to approve, nor definite as to the period to which it refers; and that it is not fitting that this House should adopt a proceeding which has the appearance of calling in question the undoubted right of the House of Lords to inquire into the state of Ireland, &c. &c." Lords Commissioners' Speech:

[Session 2, 1841.]

Motion, That an humble address be presented to Her Majesty, to offer our humble thanks for Her Majesty's most gracious Speech, to express our satisfaction that Her Majesty has availed herself of the earliest opportunity of resorting to the advice and assistance of Her Parliament, after the dissolution of the late Parliament, &c. &c.:—Amendment proposed, to leave out from the words "late Parliament" to the end of the question, in order to add the words, "Humbly to represent to Her Majesty, that we observe with great concern that the public expenditure has of late, in each of several successive years, exceeded the annual income, and that we are convinced of the necessity of adopting measures for the purpose of remedying so great an evil; to assure Her Majesty that we are deeply sensible of the importance of those considerations to which Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to direct our attention, in reference to the commerce and revenue of the country, and to the laws which regulate the trade in corn:—That in deciding on the course which it may be advisable to pursue with reference to matters of such importance, it will be our earnest desire to consult the interests and promote the welfare of all classes of Her Majesty's subjects; that we feel it, however, to be our duty humbly to submit to Her Majesty, that it is essential to the satisfactory result of our deliberations on these and other matters of public concern, that Her Majesty's Government should possess the confidence of this House and of the country, and respectfully to represent to Her Majesty, that that confidence is not reposed in the present advisers of Her Majesty:—To assure Her Majesty, that in the gracious expression of Her Majesty's deep sympathy with those of Her subjects who are now suffering from distress and want of employment, we recognize an additional proof of Her Majesty's tender regard for the welfare of Her subjects, and that we cordially join in the prayer of Her Majesty, that all our deliberations may be guided by wisdom and may conduce to the happiness of Her people," instead thereof (Mr. Stuart Wortley).—Question put, That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question.——— Ayes 269—Noes 360 - - - - - - - - - - - - - August 27, 1841, Sess. 2, p. 3.

Address reported; read a second time:—Amendment proposed, to add at the end thereof the words, "That we further respectfully represent to Your Majesty, that, in our opinion, the distress which Your Majesty deplores is mainly attributable to the circumstance of your whole people not being fully and fairly represented in this House; and that we feel it will be our duty to consider the means of so extending and regulating the suffrage, and of adopting such improvements in the system of voting, as will confer on the working classes that just weight in the representative body which is necessary to secure a due consideration of their interests, and which their present patient endurance of suffering gives them the strongest title to claim" (Mr. Sharman Crawford).—Question put, That those words be there added. ———Ayes 39—Noes 283 - - - - - - - - - - - - - August 28, 1841, Sess. 2, p. 9.

[Session 1844.]

DAY OF THE MONTH, SESSION, and PAGE.

Another amendment proposed, after the word "deplore," at the end of the tenth paragraph, to insert the words, "To declare that we should ill discharge the duty we owe to Her Majesty, if we did not direct Her most serious attention to the present condition of Her faithful people, which, notwithstanding the improvement in some branches of industry, still exhibits such an extent of destitution and suffering, as to demand from Her Majesty's faithful Commons an expression of their opinion of the causes, and the best means of removing the same; to assure Her Majesty, that, although we fully appreciate the progress made by this Parliament in reducing the duties on many articles of import, we at the same time deeply lament that Her Majesty has not been advised to call our immediate attention to the repeal of those pernicious laws which prevent free trade in corn and provisions, so essential to the sustenance and comfort of the people, and to the prosperity of the State; and that we earnestly implore Her Majesty's gracious co-operation for the repeal of those prohibitory and restrictive laws which give monopolies in sugar and other articles to certain classes of Her Majesty's subjects, to the detriment of the rest, so that no duties may be levied on any imports, except for the direct purposes of revenue to Her Majesty's Exchequer; to submit most respectfully to Her Majesty, that an excessive and unequal taxation, disproportionate to the reduced value of property, the diminished profits on capital, and to the inadequate wages of labour, pressing on all ranks of the community, but especially on the working classes, is a principal cause of the existing distress; and that a reduction of the same is absolutely necessary for the relief of Her Majesty's loyal, peaceful, and suffering people; that as this country is, and as we rejoice to hear is likely to continue at peace with all the world, we humbly represent to Her Majesty, that many branches of the civil, military, and naval establishments may be so greatly reduced as to procure for the people considerable relief from the pressure of taxation, without detriment to the public service" (Mr. Hume).—Question put, That these words be there inserted.——AYES 49—NOES 235 - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - February 1, 1844, p. 6.

Another Amendment proposed at the end of the twelfth paragraph, beginning with the words, "That we most sincerely share with Her Majesty," to add the words, "We regret, however, to be compelled humbly to represent to Her Majesty, that neither Her Majesty's relations with foreign powers, nor the state of the revenue, nor the condition of the commercial or manufacturing interests, are such as in our opinion, to justify us in addressing Her Majesty in the language of congratulation; and that large portions of the agricultural and colonial interests of the empire are labouring under a state of progressive depression, calculated to excite serious apprehension and anxiety" (Mr. Disraeli).—Debate arising; motion made, and question put, That the debate be now adjourned.——AYES 80—NOES 221 - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - February 2, 1849, p. 7.
